

Be a Champion POV Text

Hello, welcome to the POV stories for “Be a Champion.” Let’s begin.

Inca has always wanted to help homeless people. In fact, she has always been a champion for the poor starting in the far past and then up until now. During this entire time she has been a champion for poor people. She has been a champion for homeless people. She has always wanted to help them during this entire time. In fact, she has wanted to build houses for every homeless person in San Francisco, every one. That has been her dream.

Now most people have thought that she was crazy. Every time she talked to someone about it they have thought she was crazy. They have said “The status quo is fine. Homeless people deserve to be poor. They deserve to be homeless and they deserve to be hungry.” This is what they said. They have always said this.

Well, luckily, Inca has always dared to be different. Since she was young, until now, the entire time, she has always dared to be different. And a few years ago she started to build small cheap houses out of plastic bottles. So about two years ago she started to build small cheap houses out of plastic bottles. She started two years ago and she has continued until recently. So starting two years ago she started to build houses out of plastic bottles and she has continued building them for two years.

Now this was a great innovation. In fact, soon, every rich person in San Francisco embraced her idea. And after two years all the poor people in San Francisco had a home. Every homeless person had a new house made of plastic bottles. The homeless people were happy, the rich people were happy and Inca was very, very happy.

That is the end of our first story. Next we’ll go to the future, so imagine this story happening in the future.

There will be a woman named Inca and she’ll want to help all the homeless people. She’s going to be a champion for poor people. She’s going to be a champion for homeless people. She’ll want to build houses for all the homeless people in San Francisco.

Of course most people will think she's crazy, especially the rich people. They'll say "The status quo is fine. Homeless people deserve to be hungry, poor and homeless." But Inca will dare to be different. She'll dare to be different. She'll build small cheap houses from used plastic bottles. This is going to be a great innovation.

And, in fact, soon, every rich person in San Francisco will embrace her idea. They'll give her more and more money and she'll build more and more and more plastic bottle houses.

Until finally, eventually, after two years, all the poor people in San Francisco will have a home. They'll all have a house made of plastic bottles. The rich people will be happy, the poor people will be happy, Inca will be happy, too.

And that is the end of our point of view stories and the end of our "Be a Champion" lessons. Listen carefully, notice the changes. Listen, listen, listen, relax, relax, relax, that's all you need to do. See you next time, bye-bye.
